The International Federation of Journalists (IFJ) published on 31 December 2017 the annual list of 81 media professionals who lost their lives in work-related incidents around the world. This number has since been updated to 82 following confirmation that another Afghan journalist, Sayed Mehdi Hosaini Jomhor News Agency was killed in the bomb attack at a Shia cultural centre in the Afghan capital Kabul on 28 December 2017.

The Federation welcomed the reduction in the number of media fatalities for the third year in a row which recorded the lowest death tally in a decade, but warned against any complacency. This report, which sets out in detail stories of loss and tragedies due to violence in journalism around the world, fully justifies that call for caution.

Despite the fact that 2017 continued the downward trend from 2015, the number of journalists’ killings in many parts of the world gives little hope to end the safety crisis in journalism and stop the bloodbath, hurt and grief. This was the year of two tales in the fate of journalists. While the stalemate in Yemen and the loss of ground to the so-called Islamic State (IS) in Iraq contributed to the reduction of crossfire incidents in these countries, Afghanistan recorded the highest number of suicide attacks and Mexico came first for targeted killings.

The motives for these killings were as wide as regions they occurred in. The methods were dramatic, too, with a clear intent to strike fear and despair among journalists. Thus, in Malta, Investigative journalist Daphne Caruana Galizia was blown up in a powerful car explosion which threw her out of the vehicle and into the nearby fields. She had exposed collusion between the murky business and politics fueled by corruption in Malta. Gauri Lankesh, Indian prominent journalist was shot multiple times outside her home following her stand against violent nationalism. Edwin Rivera Paz, a journalist from Honduras, was hunted down and killed in the state Veracruz, Mexico.

In the overwhelming majority of these cases, the killers have not been identified and justice for the victims and their families remain as elusive as ever, another trend which continued in 2017. The purpose of this report, like others before it, is to help the IFJ and its affiliates take stock of the safety crisis in media, size up the challenge of impunity for crimes against journalists and chart the course to overcome it. This includes constantly reminding governments of their obligation to protect journalists and media professionals.

In this regard, the IFJ has worked with experts in international human rights law to codify legal provisions pertaining to media protection in a text which will be proposed for adoption by members of the United Nations as a new international convention on the safety and independence of journalists and other media professionals. This would be a convention with a difference as it aims at providing a real means to enforcing existing laws in order to hold accountable those who attack journalists.

There were also pro-active initiatives by IFJ affiliates in their campaign to promote the safety of journalists and to fight against impunity. One of them is the establishment of the Iraq National Committee on Safety of Journalists and the Issue of Impunity for which the Iraqi Journalists’ Syndicate (IJS) advocated for. In Asia Pacific, journalists’ unions in Nepal and The Philippines have established monitoring networks to push for meaningful change within the media environment.

The roll call of tragedy and loss covered in these annual reports are devastating to the journalists’ community. However, the best tribute we can pay to the victims is to unrelentingly mobilise and work tirelessly to lift the shadow of impunity which has been over journalism for far too long.
We Mourn the Loss

Gender Council Statement

For several years, we have kept data on women journalists specifically targeted and killed. This is not to say that these deaths are somehow more important than the much bigger numbers of male journalists murdered. We do so in recognition of the many years of under-reporting of deaths and violence against women journalists. We continue to strive to ascertain the true scope of violence and murders in order to push back against the almost total impunity afforded to perpetrators.

This year is different from past years, not only because of the stature of some of the women killed (usually it is unknown or local journalists that are at much higher risk), but also because – in one case – there has been three arrests, albeit within a western European context. Additionally, there is a notable increase of killings of women journalists up from last year.

This year we mourn the loss of eight of our sisters, in Denmark, India, Iraq, Malta and Mexico.

End Targeting, End Killings, End Violence, End Impunity.

The murder of Swedish journalist Kim Wall in Denmark hit the headlines around the globe. Wall’s mutilated torso was discovered 10 days after she had been reported missing on 10 August, 2017. She had failed to return from a trip aboard a civilian submarine, the Nautilus, with its inventor Peter Madsen. Madsen has now been arrested and charged with her murder. Ms Wall had worked for The Guardian, The New York Times and The South China Morning Post.

In India, Gauri Lankesh, a prominent journalist and an outspoken critic of Hindu nationalists was shot dead outside her home as she returned from work on 5 September, 2017. Lankesh died at the scene, with local officials saying they suspected she had been under surveillance from the gunmen and had reportedly received death threats. Karnataka state’s chief minister, Siddaramaiah, has called it an “assassination on democracy”, referring to her work on human rights. No arrests have been made, in spite of rewards offered.

Four of our sisters were killed in Iraq in 2017, putting it back among the deadliest countries. Shifa Gardi, was killed on 25 February 2017 in a roadside bomb blast while covering fighting between government forces and jihadists in Mosul. The 30-year-old reporter worked for Iraqi Kurdish channel Rudaw. Tuba Akyilmaz, a female Turkish Kurdish journalist aka ujiyan Arhan, was shot in the head on 3 March while covering clashes between different Kurdish armed groups in Sinjar.

Also fatally injured in Iraq was female journalist Veronique Robert. She died of injuries sustained in a landmine that also killed two of her colleagues and their fixer in Mosul. Another female journalist, Rana Al-Ajeeli, was killed while covering the clashes between the Iraqi Army and ISIS in Al-Anbar on the Iraqi-Syrian border, 16 November 2017. According to media reports, Rana was reporting while embedded with one of the groups of the Popular Mobilization Units and was killed by an IED that targeted the armed group.

In Malta, in another highly reported death, Daphne Caruana Galizia, a female independent journalist specialising in investigative reporting, was murdered by a car bomb on 16 October 2017. TVM reported that Galizia had filed a police report 15 days before her murder saying she was being threatened. According to the Guardian, ‘her murder sent shockwaves through Malta and alarmed the EU, which had already expressed concerns about rule of law on the island.’ The article continued; ‘The journalist’s family are taking legal action against the island’s police, saying the investigation into the killing cannot be impartial and independent since Caruana Galizia wrote critical articles about both the senior officer now running it, Silvio Valletta, and his wife, a top government minister.’ The investigation continues.

In Mexico, the murder of Miroslava Breach on 23 March 2017 reminds us how deadly the profession remains in countries where freedom of the press is a long awaited goal amidst ceaseless violence. The 54-year-old female correspondent for La Jornada newspaper was shot dead outside her home. Breach covered mainly corruption, organised crime and drug trafficking. She had also worked for the magazine Norte de Ciudad Juárez, which had ceased publication because of the violence.

These deaths highlight the implacable impunity that continues to threaten freedom of the press and the lives of journalists everywhere. As killings continue and impunity remains, our New Year wish also remains the same, for all journalists: End Targeting, End Killings, End Violence, End Impunity.

Africa as a continent is still struggling to come to terms with the media’s role in exposing corruption and gross human rights abuses. While it is generally accepted that the media is a crucial pillar in every democratic dispensation, with regards to its role in enhancing transparency, accountability and the rule of law, journalists and media workers continue to pay dearly for defending these democratic principles and safeguarding human rights.

Despite the fact that most African governments make clarion calls to strengthen the democratic gains that had been made over the past few years, their commitment to guarantee the safety and security of journalists and media workers in general remains questionable. Africa, like the other regions of the world, had its horrific share on the “Kill List” in 2017 with at least eight journalists killed in relation to their work.

For the first time in decades, Nigeria tops the list with 3 journalists killed in the line of duty, while a fourth died in a ghastly car accident while returning to his home town. In Somalia, three journalists were killed in 2017 and two others in the Democratic Republic of Congo and in South Sudan. The killings in Nigeria and in the DRC once again highlight the need for African governments to guarantee the safety and security of journalists everywhere to protect the lives and properties of its citizens. All four journalists killed in Nigeria and in the DRC were “shot” and killed by unidentified gunmen. As has often been the case in the continent, the killers are still at large; with no arrests have been made so far.

In African newest state, South Sudan, civil war is taking its toll on the civilian population, including journalists covering the fighting. Indeed, Christopher Allen, the journalist who killed in the country, was embedded with rebel forces fighting government forces. The situation in Somalia also continues to be extremely explosive for journalists who remain exposed to frequent Al-Shabaab militants’ attacks and bombings which claimed the lives of three Somali journalists.

These levels of violence and the lack of action to address the real issue of impunity are ground for African journalists and their organisations to further mobilise support and engage governments towards greater protection for media professionals. The safety of journalists on the continent remains a big challenge as journalists are consistently attacked, threatened and killed at will by those who feel aggrieved by their reports including the state cohorts and its security members. Those who kill journalists with the intent of silencing them must be made to understand that “killing the journalist does not kill the truth”. Such people, irrespective of their political or religious affiliations, must be apprehended and brought to justice.

Killed List 2017

APRIL 16 NIGERIA

Famous Giobaro, the journalist who worked for state-owned Radio Glory FM 97.1 as desk editor was killed by two unidentified gunmen who broke into his home in Yenagoa, an area located in the Bayelsa State, and shot him several times in the stomach.

JULY 8 NIGERIA

Lawrence Okojie, the journalist with the Nigeria Television Authority (NTA) in Edo State, was shot and killed while returning home from work by unknown gunmen, according to reports.

JULY 12 DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF CONGO

Innocent Banga Karaba, the journalist for the public broadcast service, RTNC, in the northern eastern city of Bunia was killed at his home by an unidentified assailant who attacked him, fatally injuring the victim. According to the Vice Governor of Ituri Province, Pacifique Keta, Karaba “was hit with a blunt object at his home”. Some people linked his killing to the Hema – Lendu conflict. The father of nine was a 20- year veteran reporter for the RTNC where he presented news programmes.

AUGUST 26 SOUTH SUDAN

Christopher Allen, the American freelance journalist was killed while covering fighting between the South Sudanese army and the rebels in Kaya, near the South Soudan’s border with Uganda, according to media reports. Christopher Allen was said to have been embedded with the rebel forces when he was killed. He had worked for Al Jazeera, Vice News and also covered the war in Eastern Ukraine.

SEPTEMBER 13 SOMALIA

Abdullahi Osman Moallim, the broadcast journalist who worked with Jubbaland TV, died of injuries that he had sustained during a suicide bombing by the Al- Shabab militants in Beledeweyne on 10 September. Two other journalists, Abdi Shukur Mohamed Hassan and Abdulkadir Omar Ibrahimi, were also injured in the attack when a suicide bomber detonated an explosive vest outside a restaurant in the Hiiraan region.

OCTOBER 14 SOMALIA

Ali Nur Siad Ahmed, the 31-year- old cameraman was killed in a massive suicide bombing at the busy KM5 junction in Mogadishu when the militants blew up a truck in the capital. The blast was described by media reports as the “deadliest and most powerful single attack” in Somali in recent times. Over 250 civilians, including four journalists were also injured in the bombing.

NOVEMBER 15 NIGERIA

Ikechukwu Onobogu, the 50-year-old cameraman with Anambra Broadcasting Service (ABS) based in the state capital, Awka, was found dead four days after he was reported missing by his family. According to Premium Times newspaper, Onubogu left home on 12 November after receiving a phone call from an unknown person. After failing to return home or to report at his office the following day, he was reported missing by his family. Police later found his lifeless body with bullet wounds on 15 November at Obosi, Idemile North near Onitsha.

DECEMBER 11 SOMALIA

Mohamed Ibrahim Mohamed

The 28-year-old journalist, also known Gabow, was killed when an explosive device which had been planted underneath his car’s drivers seat blew up in Mogadishu’s Madina district. According to media reports, Ibrahim had taken a break from work in order to spend time with his children. The explosion occurred when he got back into his car. Mohamed Ibrahim was a news anchor working for privately-owned Kalsan TV, reporting primarily on political issues.
The Americas
Regional Overview

In the Americas, the region of Latin America and the Caribbean remains challenging for the exercise of journalism, especially with regard to the safety of media professionals. 17 of them lost their lives in work-related incidents with Mexico recording 13 killings and topping the list of the most dangerous countries in the region. The safety crisis, prevailing in countries plagued by violence and inequality, means that journalists are forced to work in an environment of fear which restricts the right to freedom of expression.

The case in point is Mexico, a country in which journalists are under threat from both groups involved in organised crime and powerful politicians whose rule is based on unfettered violence and protected by total impunity. The figure of 13 Mexican journalists and media staff killed in 2017 adds to hundreds of killings recorded since 2000 which largely continue without accountability.

Furthermore, Journalists face other challenges, including attacks by security forces and harassment by organised criminals and powerful figures from the political and business world. In such a context, to date, governments in the region have shown no ability to provide effective protection for journalists.

The lack of political will and the shortage of answers from the authorities to tackle the crisis, not only worsened the safety situation but also led to censorship and self-censorship with regard to press freedom. This in turn has deprived the society of the right to information, thus underlining democracy in Latin America.

Killed List 2017

JANUARY 17 HONDURAS
Igor Padilla, the 36-year-old TV news presenter for Canal HCH and well-known crime reporter, was fatally injured when four unidentified gunmen opened fire on him in Suyapa, an area of San Pedro Sula as he was filming a TV documentary on violence against journalists in the country. According to reports, Padilla received a phone call and stepped on the street to take it when the four attackers, allegedly in police uniform, shot him with high velocity weapons. He was taken to hospital with multiple injuries but died on the way.

18 suspects have been arrested in connection with the journalist’s murder and two reportedly confessed to their involvement, reports added. The journalists’ colleague said that he had received death threats and some believe that his murder was ordered by members of the criminal group Mara who are currently in prison.

FEBRUARY 14 DOMINICAN REPUBLIC
Luís Manuel Medina, the presenter of the news programme Milenio Caliente – or Hot Millennium – was killed while on air at the radio station FM 103.5 when gunmen opened fire during a news bulletin which was being broadcast on Facebook Live. Producer and director Leo Martínez was also shot dead in an adjacent office at the radio station FM 103.5.

Gunfire could be heard during the Facebook Live video, along with a woman yelling “Shots! Shots! Shots!” before the transmission was abruptly cut off. The station secretary Dayaba García was also injured in the attack and taken to hospital where she had to undergo emergency surgery.

MARCH 2 MEXICO
Cecilio Pineda Birto, the editor of La Voz de la Tierra Caliente and contributor to La Jornada Guerrero newspaper was shot dead by two youths riding a motorbike in the city of Altamirano, Guerrero State. The crime reporter, who also contributed to El Universo and reportedly received death threats from organised crime groups, had revealed the involvement of a PRI representative in drug trafficking. In September 2015, Birto was attacked by two armed men outside his home and one suspect was detained in 2016 in connection with the attack.

MARCH 19 MEXICO
Ricardo Monlui, the 57-year-old director of the El Político magazine and columnist for El Sol de Córdoba and el Diario de Xalapa, was shot dead in the Mexican state of Veracruz while he was with his family. Monlui served as President of the Association of Journalists and Photographers de Córdoba. and was the leader of a national union for sugar cane farmers, whose members have been victims of attacks in recent years.

MARCH 23 MEXICO
Miroslava Breach, the 54-year-old female correspondent for La Jornada newspaper was shot dead outside her home. Ms Breach, who covered mainly corruption, organised crime and drug traffic, was in her car outside her home when unidentified gunmen in another car shot her. She was taken to hospital but died shortly afterwards.

The journalist had also worked for the magazine Norte de Ciudad Juárez which ceased publication because of the climate of violence which made it impossible to practice journalism safely and independently.

APRIL 29 MEXICO
Filiberto Álvarez Landeros, the 65-year-old journalist was shot dead in his car by unidentified gunmen in the municipality of Tlaquiltenango. Landeros, who presented a radio programme of poetry and music on Jojutla station, was taken to the nearby hospital where he subsequently died.
Maximino Rodríguez Palacios, the 73-year-old veteran journalist was shot dead outside a shop in Paz, a town located in the state of Baja California Sur. Local media reports said the journalist, who was with his wife, had parked his car when unidentified gunmen in another vehicle fired up to 15 bullets on the couple, killing the journalist and wounding his wife.

Maximino Rodríguez Palacios was still active in reporting on the activities of organised crime groups and often published details of the gangsters, including their names. He reportedly was aware of the risks to his life and often said he had no fear and was ready for the consequences of his work.

Héctor Jonathan Rodríguez, the 26-year-old reporter for El Costeño, a weekly publication founded by his father, was shot dead in the locality of Autlán de Navarro, Jalisco. The victim was travelling in a car with his mother Córdova Oceguera who is also El Costeño’s deputy sales manager when the attackers opened fire, killing journalist and injuring his mother in the shoulder. Media reports said that the publication focused on crime in the community and its offices were under police protection.

Javier Valdez Cárdenas, the founder of Riodoce, a weekly publication, was shot dead outside his office by unidentified gunmen in Culiacan city in the north-western Mexican state of Sinaloa.

Javier Valdez Cárdenas, who covered extensively drug trafficking, had reportedly received death threats against him and his publication. He reportedly said that, in 2009, there was a grenade attack against his publication but no one was hurt. Mexico’s President Enrique Peña Nieto led the condemnation of Cárdenas’ killing which he described as an ‘outrageous crime’ and pledged to protect journalists in his country.

Salvador Adame, the body of the director of the local television station 6TV, who had been missing after being abducted on 18 May in the city of Nueva Italia was found in the western state of Michoacán. Media reports quoted state officials as saying that Adame’s burnt remains had been located near Nuevo Italia and identified with DNA testing.

Adame reportedly covered local politics but avoided reporting on the criminal activities of the drug barons. He and his wife were detained by the local police in 2016 for covering a protest outside city hall, according to media reports.

Juan Carlos Hernández Ríos, the 29-year-old photojournalist and contributor for La Bandera Noticias news website was killed by two unidentified gunmen who fatally shot him outside his home in Guanajuato. He was taken to Yuriria hospital where he died of his wounds.

According to La Bandera Noticias, Hernández Ríos had received death threats from the local administration. He had also published shortly before his killing a video in which two police officers who accused their superiors were also later murdered.

Edwin Rivera Paz, the Honduran journalist, who worked for his country’s national television broadcaster (HCH), was killed in the town of Acayucan, in the Mexican state of Veracruz. In a statement, the UNESCO Director General condemned the murder of Rivera Paz who had fled to Mexico out of fear for his life following the killing in January of 2017 of Igor Padilla, the director and producer of a programme Rivera Paz had worked for on the Honduran national television.

Cándido Ríos, the 55-year-old crime reporter was shot dead by unidentified gunmen in the Mexican state of Veracruz and became the tenth journalist to be killed in the country since the start of the year in work-related incidents. Ríos, who worked for the Diario de Acayucan, was shot in the south of Veracruz while he was with two other people, including a former police officer. The journalist had received death threats since 2012, mainly from the local administration officials, for his reporting. He was admitted into the protection programme for human rights defenders and journalists, according to the Comisión Estatal para la Atención y Protección de los Periodistas (CEAPP).

Carlos William Juárez, the journalist of Canal 22 Tegucigalpita was shot by unidentified gunmen in the province of Cortés, north of Honduras while he was with a friend who was also injured. The victims were taken to Puerto Cortés hospital where the journalist later died of his wounds.
OCTOBER 5 MEXICO
Edgar Daniel Esqueda Castro, a photographer who had gone missing after being taken away from his home by men dressed as police officers, was found dead and dumped in an open area near the airport in the northern state of San Luis Potosí. According to media reports, parts of his body were tied and showed signs of torture.

Mr. Esqueda’s wife reportedly said armed men broke into the couple’s house while they were sleeping and said they were government agents and took the journalist away. But, the state prosecutor’s office denied that any of its agents were involved in Mr. Esqueda’s abduction. The journalist, who covered crime and social issues, had reported receiving threats from the police in the past, according to a statement released Friday by the federal government’s protection office for journalists.

Mr. Esqueda filed a complaint with the state human rights commission, which passed on the information to the federal protection office. Officials with the office, part of Mexico’s powerful Interior Ministry, approached Mr. Esqueda, who told them that he had filed a criminal complaint and that he had received no further threats. The state human rights commission then apparently passed Mr. Esqueda’s complaint back to the same police agency that had first threatened him, according to the federal statement.

OCTOBER 23 HONDURAS
Carlos Oveniel Lara Domínguez, the journalist who worked for Canal 12 was gunned down in Copán department, west of Honduras, by unidentified armed men who opened fire on his vehicle as he was on the way to work. According to local sources, Dominguez had reported receiving death threats in months prior to his killing. He was believed to have accused one person he did not name as being behind the threats.

DECEMBER 19 MEXICO
Gumaro Pérez, the 35-year-old reporter, who covered security and narcotrafficking, was shot dead while attending the nativity play at his child’s school in the municipality of Acayucan located in Veracruz state. Media reports quoted a witness as saying that a gunman entered the class of Pérez’s child and shot directly at the journalist four times. He became the 13th media professional killed in Mexico since the start of 2017.

As we document the cases of those journalists killed in our region both here and in our impunity campaigns, we reflect somberly on the lives taken and question journalists and their organizations on what more we can do to turn this situation around.

They protest in their towns and cities and online. They release reports offering recommendations for change. They campaign to draw global attention to the weaknesses and failings of governments, courts and state forces in tracking down and bring perpetrators to justice. They follow cases and hold report cards up to the global spotlight. They look to find solutions out of hard-won victories. They call on governments and their leaders to bear responsibility for the deadly smear that blights countries like Myanmar, Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Pakistan and India. They try to do more to bring justice to those lost, even when they know they are pushed to their limits.

There is no quick fix. That is all too clear. But because impunity leads to more murders and is a warning to the breakdown of judicial systems, the rule of law and democracy, there is a need for things to change. They must change.

In countries like Nepal and the Philippines, effective media monitoring networks established by the FNJ and NUJP keep tabs on the media environment, condemn and continue to push for meaningful change.

In Pakistan, intensive efforts to strengthen the capabilities of journalists to operate with more preparedness and knowledge on the dangers are beginning to make impact but progress is still painfully slow.

In Afghanistan, efforts by the AIJA are working to bring the government to the table and make meaningful commitments to making journalists safer.

There are still some notable gaping holes. In Bangladesh, India and the Maldives, it sadly seems that media workers’ lives carry little regard in the wider state interests. So long as that climate remains, the numbers of attacks on journalists are likely to mount.

Today, the IFJ’s members globally support our colleagues where they are under fire. Because when media pool their efforts, share good practices and expand their coverage on attacks against journalists, change is possible.

Furthermore, when media – not just media workers but also media companies - put editorial and political differences aside to act in unison to combat impunity, it makes an impact. Strong unions and associations working together are powerful united voices.

Right now we remember those we have needlessly lost. But we must also remember the ongoing fight ahead.

Killed List 2017

JANUARY 12 PAKISTAN

Muhammad Jan, the 37-year-old journalist of Qudrat, the local Urdu language newspaper in Pakistan’s troubled southwestern Balochistan province, close to Afghan and Iranian border, was gunned down by unidentified gunmen. According to AFP quoting police sources, Jan was shot while riding home on his motorbike in Qalat district, some 160 kilometres south of Quetta, the provincial capital.

“Two attackers on motorcycle opened fire on him, using a pistol and killing him on the spot,” senior police officer Muhammad Ali told AFP. Jan also served as a press secretary for the Balochistan media council.

FEBRUARY 3 BANGLADESH

Abdul Hakin Shimul, the local correspondent of the Bangla-language daily Samakal, was shot in the face while covering clashes between two factions of the ruling party, the Awami League, on Thursday 2 February during which gunshots were fired. He was admitted to a local hospital in a critical condition. He died on the way to capital Dhaka, where he was being taken for further treatment. His condition deteriorated mid-way and he was taken to a hospital in Tangail, central Bangladesh, where he succumbed to his injuries.

FEBRUARY 12 PAKISTAN

Taimoor Abbas, the 22-year-old assistant cameraman of privately-owned Samaa TV news channel, was shot in the head and chest when he was traveling in the Digital Satellite News Gathering (DSNG) van in north Nazimabad to report on an attack on the police. He was taken to Abbasi Shaheed Hospital where he died from his injuries. The unidentified assailants on a motorbike had thrown an explosive device on a police armored personnel carrier, and had started shooting when the Samaa TV van arrived.

MARCH 13 PHILIPPINES

Joaquin Brinoes, the columnist for the tabloid Remate was killed by assailants on a motorbike who shot him four times in the back. Brinoes, popularly known as ‘Dos por Dos’ after the radio show he used to host, was a hard-hitting journalist, having also published the local Masbate Tribune. In 2000, Brinoes was sentenced to 12 years in jail after being found guilty of six libel charges. He served five years of the sentence, after which he was released on parole in 2005. Following his release, he was harassed and intimidated by the local authorities, including in 2009 when the Masbate provincial vice governor brought a lawsuit against him. The vice governor filed libel allegations against the then editor the Masbate Tribune.

MAY 15 INDIA

Shyam Sharma, the journalist who worked for Agniban, a local evening newspaper, was on his way to Manglia Square in his car when he was stopped in Indore, Madhya Pradesh state, by two assailants on motorbikes. They asked him to wind down his window, then slit his throat and fled the scene. A passer-by saw Sharma bleeding heavily and rushed him to hospital. He was moved to another hospital, where he was pronounced dead on arrival.

MAY 17 AFGHANISTAN

Mohamad Amir Khan, Zinullah Khan, Abdul Latif and Ghani, four media workers for the Afghan Public Radio and Television (RTA) in the city of Jalalabad, Nangarhar province were killed in the suicide attack on the RTA. 17 others staff members were injured in the attack. Media reports said that four attackers, including two suicide bombers, forced their way into the RTA station at around 9:30 am. The two suicide bombers blew themselves up at the front gate and outside the main building while other attackers entered the main building. It took the security forces more than three hours to end the assault.
TIME TO END IMPUNITY: JOURNALISTS AND MEDIA STAFF KILLED IN 2017

MAY 31 AFGHANISTAN

TOLO TV staff member Aziz Naween, Press TV reporter Habibullah Hassanzada, Mohammad Omer Uruzgani who worked for National Radio Television and BBC Afghan driver in Kabul Mohammed Nazir were among victims of the explosion in the Zanbaq Square in Afghanistan capital, which killed at least 80 people and injured 350. Three more journalists of BBC Kabul and a reporter of TV1 channel were also injured. The office of TV1 is close to the explosion area. The Taliban have denied responsibility of the attack.

In a statement, the BBC said that: “It is with great sadness that the BBC can confirm the death of BBC Afghan driver Mohammed Nazir following the vehicle bomb in Kabul earlier today, as he was driving journalist colleagues to the office.” Four BBC journalists were also injured and were treated in hospital. Their injuries were not thought to be life threatening.

MAY 31 INDIA

Kamlesh Jain, the 42-year-old was shot dead by two motorcycle-borne assailants at his office in Pipliya Mandi, 15km from district headquarters Mandsaur. He was shot twice from close range and died on the way to hospital. Jain was reportedly filing stories for Indore-based Hindi daily Nai Dunia, with which he was associated for the last 12 years.

Jain’s family said that local illegal liquor sellers had threatened to kill him after he reported their activities to the police a few days earlier. According to a report, the family claimed that Jain had informed the police about the threat.

JUNE 11 PAKISTAN

Bakshish Elahi, the Bureau Chief of K-2 Times, an Urdu daily newspaper in Haripur, was shot dead by unknown motorbike-borne gunmen near his home at Lora Chowk, Haripur district of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa. The gunmen fled the scene after firing five shots at Elahi, one of which hit him in the head and others in the chest and stomach.

AUGUST 6 PHILIPPINES

AUGUST 7 PHILIPPINES

Leo Diaz, the columnist for Sapol Newspaper and a reporter for Radio Mindanao Network, was shot leaving his house in Sultan Kudarat province. He died from multiple gunshots. Mindanao province has been under martial law since 23 May 2017 following violent clashes between locals and alleged IS-supporters in Marawi City.

SEPTEMBER 5 INDIA

Gauri Lankesh, the 55-year-old respected prominent journalist and an outspoken critic of Hindu nationalists, was shot dead outside her home in Rajarajeshwarinagar in northern Bengaluru, Karnataka, as she returned from work. Three unidentified gunmen on a motorbike fired at least four shots at her as she entered through the gate of her home. Lankesh died at the scene after receiving gunshots to the head and chest. The gunmen fled the scene.

Local officials said they suspected she had been under surveillance from the gunmen. Her death has been widely condemned, with Karnataka state’s chief minister Siddaramaiah calling it an “assassination on democracy”. The journalist, known as Gauri, worked for The Times of India and later ran an independent newspaper, Lankesh Patrike, along with her brother Indrajit for several years. The newspaper had been founded by her father, P Lankesh, a left-wing poet and writer. After a split with her brother, she left to start several publications, including her own newspaper Gauri Lankesh Patrike.

SEPTEMBER 20 INDIA

Santanu Bhowmik, the 28-year-old journalist who worked for Dinraat, a cable television channel in Tripura state, northeast India was attacked and fatally wounded while he was covering a protest in Mandwai near Agartala, the capital of Tripura. He suffered head injuries from sharp objects during clashes between supporters of the Indigenous People’s Front of Tripura (IPFT), a tribal party agitating for a separate state, and the Ganamukti Parishad, the tribal wing of the Communist Party of India, Marxist (CPI-M), the ruling party in the state. Bhowmik was covering the protest and road blockade by the IPFT when he was attacked, possibly with sticks and rods. The police found him with serious stab injuries and he was rushed to a hospital where doctors declared him ‘brought dead’.

According to Afghan media reports, the blast claimed the lives of at least 40 people and left over 80 more injured. The so-called Islamic State claimed responsibility for the attack.
Europe

Regional overview

In Europe, the year 2017 was marked by the car bomb attack that killed Maltese investigative journalist Daphne Caruana Galizia, on 16 October. The journalist was well known for her investigations into the murky politics, which made her many powerful enemies. The brutal assassination was perceived as a message of intimidation targeting the profession as a whole. Three suspects have been arrested in connection to the killing, but none of them had been named in Ms Galizia’s reports. This makes many believe that they were only hitmen and the master minders haven’t been identified.

On 10 January 2018, the European Federation of Journalists shared a platform with two of Daphne Caruana Galizia’s sons, Andrew and Paul at the European Parliament to denounce the passivity of the governments on the Old Continent in the face of journalists’ murders. No European country has yet implemented the Council of Europe’s recommendation for the Protection of Journalism and the Safety of Journalists and Other Media Actors, adopted in April 2016.

And yet, on the ground, the situation continues to deteriorate. Five journalists were killed on the European continent, against three last year. The killing of Ms Galizia was a chilling reminder of another car blast which killed Belarusian journalist Pavel Sheremet on July 20, 2016 in Kiev, Ukraine. There too, to date, the killers have not been caught. The same mafia methods. The same desire to intimidate the press. The same context of impunity.

In both cases, the investigations seem to be conducted without any real desire to identify the sponsors of these killings. That is why IFJ and the EFJ joined the family of Daphne Caruana Galizia in early 2018 in calling for the appointment of a special rapporteur of the Council of Europe to monitor the investigation.

“By not respecting their positive obligation to protect journalists, the public authorities are complicit with the killers,” EFJ General Secretary Ricardo Gutiérrez said.

The European Federation of Journalists recalls that European governments committed in April 2016 to establishing an independent national monitoring body to promote the protection of journalists, with the collaboration of journalists’ unions and associations. No European state has yet delivered on that promise.
April 19 Russian Federation

Nikolai Andrushchenko, the 73-year-old co-founder of the weekly newspaper Novy Petersburg, who was attacked in St. Petersburg on 9 March by unidentified assailants and had remained unconscious at the hospital since then, died of his wounds. According to Radio Free Europe, quoting Andrushchenko’s colleagues and lawyer, the veteran journalist underwent surgery after the attack and initially connected to a ventilator but was later able to breathe on his own.

However, they said he never regained consciousness and died on April 19. His attackers have not been found. Novy Petersburg’s editor Denis Usov linked the attack against Andrushchenko to articles that the newspaper had published about corruption in the city, which exposed connections between the administration’s officials and organised criminal syndicates.

April 29 Turkey

Saad Karimian, the founder and chairman of the Persian-language GEM TV company, and his business partner were shot dead in the Maslak neighbourhood in Istanbul by masked individuals who opened fire on their vehicle. The vehicle and the gun used in the assassination were later found burnt.

GEM TV is known for its entertainment satellite channels that dub foreign films and Western television programs into Farsi for Iranians. The TV has been criticised by Iran for “showing programmes that go against Islamic values” and has been accused of spreading Western culture. The TV is officially banned in Iran but is popular inside the country for movies and Turkish TV shows dubbed into Farsi.

In 2016, a Revolutionary Court in Tehran tried Karimian in absentia and sentenced him to six years in jail on charges of “acting against national security” and “propaganda against the state.” According to his relatives, Mr Karimian had been threatened by the Iranian regime and was planning to move to London over these threats.

May 24 Russian Federation

Dimitri Popkov, the editor-in-chief of Ton-M, a local newspaper, was shot dead in Minusinsk in the Krasnodarski province, according to Radio Free Europe/ Radio Liberty. Other reports said that Popkov was found in the sauna in his backyard. He had been shot five times.

Popkov’s publication is well known for its hard hitting investigations and he had told Radio Free Europe in a recent interview that his newspaper had become an “obstacle for local officials who are now threatening and intimidating journalists.”

August 10 Denmark

Kim Wall, the headless torso of the 30-year-old Swedish journalist was found on a beach south of Copenhagen on 21 August, ten days after she had gone missing. According to media reports, DNA from the torso matched that from Ms Wall’s hairbrush and toothbrush.

Ms Wall, a freelance journalist who had written for the Guardian, New York Times and South China Morning Post, disappeared during a trip on a civilian submarine, the Nautilus, with its inventor Peter Madsen. She had been researching a feature about him and the Nautilus he built in 2008 with crowdfunding, reports added.

After failing to return from the trip, police arrested Peters Madsen who first claimed he had dropped her safely near Copenhagen but later said she had died in an accident and he had buried her at sea. However, investigators revealed that the torso had been weighted down with metal and mutilated in what appeared to be an attempt to ensure that decomposition gases passed out of the body so as to stop it from floating, according to reports.
OCTOBER 16 MALTA

Daphne Caruana Galizia, the female independent journalist, specialising in investigative reporting, was killed in a car blast that left her vehicle in several pieces in Bidnija. According to media reports quoting local sources, the extremely powerful explosion left debris from the car, a Peugeot 108, strewn across the road and in a nearby field. Police at the scene said the driver’s body was blasted out of the car and into a nearby field. TVM reported that Ms Caruana Galizia had filed a police report 15 days before saying she was being threatened, reports added.

For most journalists around the world, becoming a war correspondent is a matter of choice, one which often entails a great deal of sacrifice. But for journalists in countries torn by conflicts, the frontline can be at their doorsteps. This is the case in several Arab countries, where becoming a frontline reporter is not a matter of choice. That is the fate of most journalists in Yemen, Iraq, Palestine, Syria and Libya, some of the most dangerous countries in the world for journalists. For them, the only alternative is to leave the profession altogether.

But many are holding on to their profession and for that they need more than the praise for their courage. The International Federation of Journalists, its affiliates and regional and international partners have been working together to improve the safety conditions for the journalists in the region, including fighting against impunity for crimes targeting them.

Courage in journalism should be much more than just qualities of individual journalists. Otherwise, it will turn them into tragic heroes, producing their last report before they are killed, locked behind bars for years or forced to flee their homes in perilous journeys. It is the collective strength based on shared values which are defended by strong unions capable of fighting for the safety and the wellbeing of their members, exposing murderers, standing up to repressive governments and forcing greedy or careless employers to take their duty of care seriously. Courage also requires cooperation between journalists’ unions, media stakeholders, national trade union movements, civil society groups, national human rights centers to strengthen the regional network of journalists’ unions.

It takes such a broad coalition to deliver a clear message to the enemies of journalists and indifferent law enforcement authorities; attacks against journalists will not be tolerated.

This message needs to be backed up by action, starting from the promotion of a safety mindset among journalists and their organisations. To this end, in 2017, the IFJ organised safety trainings for hundreds of journalists in Yemen, Iraq, Palestine, Syria, and Libya. Ten safety trainers from the region, who ran these trainings, received this year an updated training material and new training skills during a refresher course. We also welcomed this year the breakthrough in the fight against impunity and threats against journalist in Iraq with the establishment of the Iraqi National Committee on Safety of Journalists and the Issue of Impunity. The Iraqi Journalists Syndicate (IJS) played a major role in establishing this official committee and hosted several of its meetings. The IFJ pledged its commitment to working with the committee which should investigate hundreds of cases of killed journalists in Iraq.

The IFJ also continued its advocacy work to demand protection for threatened journalists and justice for families of killed journalists and those who suffered attacks. In this regard, the Federation met with governments’ officials, journalists and their unions in countries across the region, wrote to heads of state and made presentation on their behalf in international fora and gatherings.
JANUARY 20 SYRIA
Shaaban Al-Taweel, also known as Abu Zaid Al-Homs, was killed by a bomb that was planted by unknown people on a car which he was using in Beit Jinn village of Rural Damascus. The car belonged to Abbas Zuraifa, one of the people who were leading the conciliation process with the Syrian Army in south-west Damascus, and it was believed that Al-Taweel himself took part in the process. 2017 was another year in which assistance from the International Safety Fund was in great demand to help journalists and media staff as well as to their family members from the four corners of the globe to meet multiple needs. The IFJ International Safety Fund paid out a total of more than 106,654.51 Euros in relief to help them relocate to safety, receive medical treatment or pay for secure accommodation.

Fortunately, the year also saw generous support from IFJ affiliates to the Safety Fund which raised 32750,00 Euro in donations and proceeds from promotion items' sales. This has enabled the Fund to continue its unique model of solidarity among journalists.

This has been the case ever since the inception of the IFJ Safety Fund in 1992 and, over the years, it has proved a vital lifeline for journalists, spending three million euros in humanitarian and emergency assistance.

The IFJ Safety Fund is made up of money raised by individual journalists and IFJ unions. It has taken up cases all over the world and intervened to provide special support for the media victims of natural disasters and accidents.

The IFJ International Safety Fund covers the following areas of assistance: The IFJ Safety Fund is designed primarily to provide assistance for journalists and media staff who are injured in the line of duty, often in the so-called “hot-spots” of the world and in cases where the media employing the journalist/media staffer are unable to cover such costs. This assistance can be in the form of travel, medical or subsistence costs.

The Safety Fund can also be used on a case-by-case limited basis to assist in legal fees for journalists/media staff that again cannot find sufficient support from their employer.

Finally, the Safety Fund can provide immediate assistance for the families of journalists and media staff whose ‘bread-winner’ has been killed and who have no means to sustain themselves.

Whenever the IFJ gives assistance there is a monitoring and reporting process to ensure that the money goes to where it is intended. In 2010 the IFJ revised the Safety Fund rules. These are available on request from the IFJ secretariat.

Over the years the IFJ Safety Fund has been used to produce publications as part of the IFJ Safety Programme. These have included the IFJ Safety Fund brochures produced in English, French, Japanese and Spanish and the IFJ Safety Manual, Live News for journalists travelling to conflict areas.

Live News has been produced in Albanian, Arabic, Bulgarian, Chinese, English, French, Italian, Japanese, Macedonian, Romanian, Russian, Serbian and Spanish. These publications provide basic guidelines on the dangers which may occur, and what measures journalists can take to minimise risks. They are distributed to journalists, free of charge.

When a journalist is attacked, everyone in journalism is affected. When a journalist is helped to overcome intimidation and violence it strikes a blow for press freedom and our rights which are of benefit to the whole community.

The Safety Fund is not just a practical source of aid and comfort; it is also a symbol of international goodwill that encourages journalists to carry on even in times of struggle and distress.

The type of relief provided by the IFJ Safety Fund, the speed with which it can be used, and the flexibility built into the system means that it is a unique source of solidarity for journalists.

The IFJ does not try to duplicate work that is being done by others. We are in regular contact with other organisations working in the field of journalists’ safety and freedom of expression. These include the Committee to Protect Journalists, the International Press Institute, Reporters Without Borders, the Canadian Journalists for Free Expression, the Writers in Prison Committee, the Rory Peck Trust and the World Association of Newspapers.

It is also a symbol of international goodwill that encourages journalists to carry on even in times of struggle and distress.

The dangers posed to journalists and media staff working in dangerous situations and conflict zones are the subject of extensive record. The IFJ has recorded the deaths of more than 1000 journalists and media staff over the past ten years.

Many journalists are killed, injured or harassed in war zones, either targeted by one side or another or caught in the crossfire of violence. Others are the victims of premeditated assault and intimidation either by criminals, terrorists or by agencies of the state — the police, the military or the security forces — acting secretly and illegally.

Very often there is little that journalists or media organisations can do to avoid casualties. There will, inevitably, be accidents, no matter how much care is taken to provide protection and there is little one can do when those targeting media use ruthless and brutal methods to crush journalistic inquiry.

However, there are steps that journalists and media organisations should take to minimise the risks to staff. In particular, the following are vital considerations in providing protection:

1. Adequate preparation, training and social protection. It is essential that journalists and media staff be in a state of readiness when difficulties arise. There should be a framework for providing individuals with health care and social protection.

2. Media organisations must guard against risk-taking for competitive advantage, and should promote co-operation among journalists whenever conditions exist which are potentially hazardous.

3. Governments must remove obstacles to journalism. They must not restrict unnecessarily the freedom of movement of journalists or compromise the right of news media to gather, produce and disseminate information in secure and safe conditions.

4. People Must Keep Their Hands Off Media. Everyone should respect the physical integrity of journalists and media staff at work. Physical interference with filming or other journalistic work must be prohibited.

With these considerations in mind, the IFJ calls on journalists groups, media organisations and all relevant public authorities to respect the following International Code of Practice for the Safe Conduct of Journalism:

1. Journalists and other media staff shall be properly equipped for all assignments including the provision of first-aid materials, communication tools, adequate transport facilities and, where necessary, protective clothing;

2. Media organisations and, where appropriate, state authorities shall provide risk awareness training for those journalists and media workers who are likely to be involved in assignments where dangerous conditions prevail or may be reasonably expected;

3. Public authorities shall inform their personnel of the need to respect the rights of journalists and shall instruct them to respect the physical integrity of journalists and media staff while at work;

4. Media organisations shall provide social protection for all staff engaged in journalistic activity outside the normal place of work, including life insurance;

5. Media organisations shall provide, free of charge, medical treatment and health care, including costs of recuperation and convalescence, for journalists and media workers who are the victims of injury or illness as a result of their work outside the normal place of work;

6. Media organisations shall protect freelance or part-time employees. They must receive, on an equal basis, the same social protection and access to training and equipment as that made available to fully employed staff.
When people think of the IFJ Safety Fund, they remember to raise money for it. Hats only go round at conference where someone thought of the Fund. People only dig in their pockets because they know it exists. Someone has to start the ball rolling. Will you start it next time? Keep the IFJ Safety Fund in mind whenever union members get together.
